LEXINGTON, KY., October 3.—The $21.—600 futurity for three-year-olds featured the inauguration of the thirty-third annual meeting of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders' Association to-day, and the famous contest was decided upset to the talent. Before the race Susie N. sold nt $50 to 600 for the field, and, after she had taken the first hent in comparative jusy fightion, she sold at $50 to the field $16, but Miss Adbell, a comparative outsider in the betting, took the next three heats. The third heat was the one which killed Susie N.'s chance and proved the splendid condition of Miss Adbell. The two raced like a team of the first half, trayeling the second quarter in 31 1-4 seconds. It was too fast for Buse N. and she dropped back, beaten. Miss Adbell came on and won, and took the next heat and race comparatively without contest.

The Tennessee stake was won easily in test. The Tennessee stake was won easily in the sixth heat by Maud Keswick, the second choice. In winning the second heat in 2:03 3-4 she broke the record for the avent.

"The new constitution, framed by the Democratic party enables the people to take on a new form of power.
"I admit that power is the greatest of all curses unless it carried with it the proper sense of responsibility.
"One cannot be governor of this State for four years without finding out something unless he shuts his eyes to what happens.

Learn the Policy.

"You must find out what is the policy of a people before you can properly judge them.

"I have learned that the Democratic party of Virginia stands first for progress, and I believe we had better go wrong sometimes than not to go at all.

"It has been the policy of our party under new conditions to bring the departments into closer touch with one another and to breed harmony among them.

The basic principle of all the government is an honest ballot, honestly conducted," declared the governor and prolonged cheering, "and I maintain that we do not need the advice of Republicans on the subject of honest elections in Virginia."

"I am informed that even the Barks-deal law 4dd not prevent the expenditure

"I am informed that even the Barks-dale law did not prevent the expenditure of money lavishly in the Ninth District by Mr. Slemp, the head and front of the Republican party in Virginia, and if money was spent there, that must be corruption.
"I say to my fellow-citizens of Greenos-ville that our new Constitution is the best product of the best men of our day and generation.

"and I say let us turn our faces to the front and be men."

The speaker here took up the State administration for the past four years, and with becoming modesty showed that the bonds of the Commonwealth had gone beyond par, and in proceeding on this line he said: "We are in a position to face the world and say that our credit is as good as honest government can make it anywhere."

He referred to the provisions made for the care of the dead, dumb and blind of the State, and said it has all been done without additional cost to the citizens of the State.

The Governor referred to the new buildings erected at the insane asylums, the pentitentiary and the Capitol, and declared that they had been erected out of sion, had gotten annually over a fait a million of revenue from the railroads of the Sinte, which was a source of taxation heretofore untouched, and then he paid the members of the commission a splen-did tribute, declaring that there was no finer body, either in point of character or ability, in any State in the American Union. from the auditor that notwithstanding the extraordinary appropriations made for needed improvements in the State, there was yet a balance of over $627,000 in the treasury, and he asked if the people now desired to swap horses, and if so, for what reason.

He charged that the Ropublican platform was as slight as the tombs at Arlington on the question of taxing corporate interests in the State, and declared with dramatic effect that the influence that put men into office usually control them after they get there.

"Mind you, I am not arguing against corporations," said the Governor. "Ve'll let them stay here among us, but we contend for our right to say they must stay right."

The Governor made an eloquent plea

The Governor made an eloquent plea for public education, and declared, amid much applause, that no people could hope to have a free ballot unless it was backed by intelligence.

"Parties cannot make people; parties can only give people a chance to make themselves," he said. "Put them all fu an equal race, and see that no one does anything to injure the rights of the other."

As to Free Books.

The Governor excorlated the Republicans on the question of free books for publis in the public schools, declaring he would prefer to have longer terms before having books, with no schools in which to use them. "That's my advice to the people of my State," he declared, with upilified hands, "and as God is my judge. I have never intentionally misled them. It may be," he continued, "that I will never again address the people of Greenes-ville on public questions, but I tell you that no man in Virginia ever believed more carnestly in the efficacy of the public school system than the humble speaker who is now addressing you."

The Governor scored the Republicans for their contentions in favor of the single book list, and asked why they hadn't given this benefit to the people when they were in authority in the State. He paid a splendid tribute to Mr. J. Eggriseton.

Mr. Eggieston's address was confined almost entirely to the subset of public clueation. His remarks about free books listened to with close attention, as the kepublicans had already been talking of this matter in this section. Mr. Eg-gieston explained the subject fully, and it of this matter in this section. Mr. Esc. gieston explained the subject fully, and it is safe to say that few people in this county will vote for "free books" now that they understand who has to pay for them, where the money will go, and who will have to pay the extra taxes.

Mr. Flood made one of the strongest speeches ever heard in this county. His straignment of the Republican party in stone. In traveling to and from the shooting grounds in transporting their dogs is a thing of the past if you provide your self with a modern Dog Crate.
